eResearch: the open access repository of the research output of Queen Margaret University, Edinburgh

This is an author-formatted version of a poster published as:

Accessed from:

http://eresearch.qmu.ac.uk/892/

Repository Use Policy

The full-text may be used and/or reproduced, and given to third parties for personal research or study, educational or not-for-profit purposes providing that:

- The full-text is not changed in any way
- A full bibliographic reference is made
- A hyperlink is given to the original metadata page in eResearch

eResearch policies on access and re-use can be viewed on our Policies page: http://eresearch.qmu.ac.uk/policies.html

Copyright © and Moral Rights for this article are retained by the individual authors and/or other copyright owners.

http://eresearch.qmu.ac.uk
Main Subject

Focusing the subject of contemporary Scottish identity into the work of a prominent figure like Liz Lochhead, leads to a number of research areas of study, spreading from questions on nationhood and cultural images, through key issues of traditions and transitions in Scottish theatre and women’s roles in it, to views of dramatic adaptations, translation and cultural dialogues, spoken with a strong female voice.

The main research subject will be analysis of female characterisation in two adaptations, Educating Agnes and Medea, discussing femininity in both artistic and cultural dimensions. Medea is a tragic story about a princess and sorceress from Colhes, seen as barbarian by her husband Jason and the society of ancient Athenians where the story takes place. Medea’s infamous murder of her own children becomes a part of her revenge plot for being abandoned by her husband and banished from the city of Corinth. Educating Agnes is based on a comic story about an old man, Arnolphe, determined to marry a young and innocent girl, Agnes, whom he decides to educate for the role of a perfect wife. In the end, Arnolphe becomes victim of his own plotting.

Methodologies

The subjective nature of the study will draw upon qualitative methods of research with the application of postmodern feminist and cultural studies approaches.

- Feminist theories: semiotics, deconstruction and sociolinguistics
- Cultural theories: postmodern culture and anthropology
- Interviews with Liz Lochhead and Graham McLaren, director of Theatre Babel
- Workshops with students to discuss interview answers

Methods

- theme identification
- questionnaires and interviews
- comparative textual and contextual analysis

Scottish identity?

The problem of Scottish identity proves complex with its marked features of multilingualism and multiculturalism. What differentiates Scotland from countries with analogous cultural establishment is the ambiguous status of all vernacular forms of Scots and Gaelic and the acknowledgement of English as the only official language.

This in a country of religious polarity, regional distinctions and historical heritage of attempts for adopting new identities, e.g. Athens of the North cultural project in the eighteenth century, has led to constant experiences of divided national identification with various degrees of marginalization.

References

Special thanks to Douglas McBride for the photo material.